The International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (INTELSAT), headquartered in Washington, D.C., was created on 20 August 1964 through the adoption of interim agreements, signed by 11 countries, for the establishment of a global commercial communications satellite system. There are now 108 member countries of INTELSAT.

Since 12 February 1973, INTELSAT has operated under definitive agreements, with an organizational structure consisting of:
(a) an Assembly of Parties (governments that are Parties to the INTELSAT Agreement); (b) a Meeting of Signatories (governments or their designated telecommunications entities that have signed the Operating Agreement); (c) a Board of Governors; and (d) an Executive Organ headed by a Director General, Mr. Richard R. Colino.

The Board of Governors, which has overall responsibility for the decisions relating to the design, development, construction, establishment, operation and maintenance of the INTELSAT space segment, is currently composed of 27 Governors representing 94 Signatories.

The INTELSAT global satellite system comprises two essential elements: the space segment, consisting of satellites owned by INTELSAT, and the ground segment, consisting of the earth stations, owned by telecommunications entities in the countries in which they are located.

At present, the space segment consists of 16 satellites in synchronous orbit at an altitude of approximately 35,780 kilometers (22,240 miles). Global service is provided through a combination of INTELSAT V, INTELSAT IV-A and INTELSAT IV satellites over the Atlantic, Indian and Pacific Ocean regions.

The INTELSAT IV-A has a capacity of 6,000 voice circuits and two television channels, while the INTELSAT IV has a capacity of 4,000 voice circuits plus two television channels. Each of the INTELSAT V generation satellites has a capacity of 12,000 voice circuits plus two television channels. In addition, some INTELSAT V's carry special maritime communications packages leased to INMARSAT for ship/shore/ship communications.

The ground segment of the global system consists of 750 communications antennas at 603 earth station sites in 149 countries, territories and dependancies.

The combined system of satellites and earth stations provides more than 1,100 international earth station-to-earth station communications pathways.

In addition to the international voice channels in full-time use (now more than 65,000), INTELSAT provides a wide variety of telecommunications services, including telegraph, telex, data and television to 170 countries, territories and possessions.

Twenty-six countries also lease satellite capacity from INTELSAT for their own domestic communications. These are: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, France, Federal Republic of Germany, India, Libya, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Peru, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sudan, Thailand, Venezuela and Zaire.

INTELSAT currently authorizes three standards for earth stations that operate international services through its satellites: Standard A, with 30-meter (100 ft.), or larger, dish antenna, ten stories tall, which can be rotated one degree per second and which can track to within a fraction of a degree a satellite stationed in synchronous orbit; and a smaller Standard B of ten meters (33 ft.). Now, a number of countries have also installed Standard C stations, with antennas of 14 meters (46 ft.) or larger, for 14/11 GHz operations with INTELSAT V.

In addition to these "gateway" earth station standards, INTELSAT authorizes standards E₁, E₂ and E₃, with antennas from 3.5 to 7.0 meters in diameter, for operation with the international INTELSAT Business Service (IBS), introduced on 1 October 1983.

Standard Z is authorized for earth stations to be used for leased domestic services. This standard provides specific guidelines on technical performance requirements; however, certain parameters can be chosen by the earth station owner, subject to INTELSAT's review.
