FASCINATING MALAYSIA

Southeast Asia's hidden gem | A wide array of attractions awaits travelers: breathtaking skyscrapers, charming colonial towns, enchanting islands and beaches, and million-year-old rainforests. Of course, no trip to Malaysia is complete without a visit to its glittering capital city, Kuala Lumpur, housing the Petronas Twin Towers, the tallest twin structure in the world. Also not to miss are the historic cities of Melaka and Penang, listed as UNESCO World Heritage Sites for the preservation of their colonial buildings. Malaysia's ethnically diverse population of Malays, Chinese, Indians, and indigenous peoples influence the country's art, architecture, festivals and events, and its delicious cuisine. For a no-frills, authentic food experience, the hawker stalls of Kuala Lumpur offer the finest in fresh local eats.

Be one with nature in beautiful Malaysian Borneo | Bako National Park is a lush oasis of exotic flora and fauna, and home to the proboscis monkey, an endangered species endemic to Borneo Island. Visiting the charming and entertaining orangutan—locally known as the “wild man of Borneo”—at the Semenggoh Nature Wildlife Reserve during feeding time is a sheer delight. Orphaned baby orangutans are taken here and rehabilitated until fit enough to be returned to the wild. For an authentic cultural experience, spend a day (or a night!) at a native Iban longhouse.

that the highest natural point on the island is less than 15 meters above sea level. The Cenotes are deep water filled sinkholes formed by water flowing through the soft limestone soil for thousands of years. The results are a stunning collection of limestone caves. The region of Cozumel and Akumal are well-known for the underground rivers that honeycomb through the limestone of the Yucatan. Many of these caves are very highly decorated and are said to be "like floating through the finest dry cave you have ever seen". The waters are touted as being "clear as air". The Cozumel Cenotes have restricted access, available only to qualified cave divers with appropriate registration in order to ensure the safety of the divers. The Cenotes can be explored and are home to several freshwater species of water life. In the early 1990s, a group of cave explorers discovered the 5th largest underwater cave in the world and now it is a huge draw for divers from all over the world who want to explore its depths and see what lives in the darkness of the freshwater limestone nooks of the Cenotes.

So whether you are looking for the intrigue of limestone cave diving, the wonders of reef diving, or the call of diving in the open ocean, Cozumel is the place to be. The warm tropical waters coupled with the warm inviting natives will captivate and intoxicate even the most seasoned diver. Grab your gear and don't forget your camera! ■

WHAT A BOOK FOR A DIVE DREAM

Undecided on where to spend a winter vacation? Pick up Beth and Shaun Tierney's "Diving the World" from Footprint books. In 18 chapters the 360-page soft cover presents vignettes on Egypt, East Africa, Maldives, Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, Philippines, Micronesia, Australia, Papua New Guinea, Solomons, Fiji, Galapagos, Mexico, Central America and Grenada. Each section kicks off with an introduction on historical or geological aspects that make it unique, and then provides details on sites, customs, depths, visibility, currents, sea life, air and water temperatures and suggested protection suits for above and below the water. Tips on surface interval activities and operators are provided as well. Icons and tables provide info at a glance and color photos spruce up every page. An introduction opens the book with general suggestions on trip planning and it closes with an appendix of resources on marine biodiversity, conservation, first aid, photo tips, training, an advertising directory with contact info for many of the operators plus an index. It's a handy resource for daydreams that'll help divers find their ideal destination. ISBN: 978 1 906098 76 6. www.footprintbooks.com.

SEE MORE IN THE PHILIPPINES

Divers considering a trip to the Philippines this winter may want to check out Gary Knapp's Dive Travel DVD on "Anilao Mabini Batangas". This swath of water below Manila links the South China and Andaman seas and divides the 7,100 volcanic islands of the Philippines roughly in half. The two seas are renowned for their biodiversity. The 47-minute high-definition video does not disappoint on documenting critters and plants. Much of the video is filled with glimpses of sea life, including many like leaf seahorses, giant clams, and exotically colored morays, nudibranchs and octopi that can be found only in the region. That many are drawn to the nutrients swept through the waters with strong currents is evident in the footage. Knapp's episodes always have a "tip of the week" which was "stay close to your dive master to see more." Knapp must have followed the advice, for many of these creatures would be tough to find except by a local who knew exactly where they live. Oddly for the island's significance in World War II, the only wreck that was visited appeared to be a small fishing craft or work boat. Wreck divers may be disappointed here, but those who enjoy cruising through warm turquoise waters in a thriving Day-Glo garden will watch this again and again. www.DiveTravelDVDs.com.

T'WEEN WAR AND AN XBOX

Parents who want to inspire their t'weens and early teens to do something other than play with the Xbox over the holidays might try giving them Scott Westerfield's "Leviathan" from Simon Pulse, Simon & Schuster. OK. It's not about diving per se. However it may captivate young minds with its Jules Vernesque sci-fi retake on World War I as fought with a 19th century version of high technology. It starts with the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, of course, and the escape of his fictionalized son Aleksandar. He meets Deryn, a Scottish girl who has disguised herself as a boy to join the British Air Service. Together they get swept into the world of war fought with zeppelins, walking machines and other half-beast half-machine creatures. One of them, the leviathan, is a dirigible that was grown on the genetic chassis of a whale. Heroes and heroines hark back to Victorian days of exploration for adventure and a strong sense of what is proper. It's a fast-paced plot that caroms between opposites of boy / girl, commoner / aristocrat, man / machine, Darwinists / and bio-engineers, which presents an underlying theme of acceptance of others' ideas and people.
