Filling the Gaps of the Growing Food Sector of the Philippines

FROM policies and schemes to planting techniques, the Philippines government is trying very hard to restore the coconut industry, especially around East Visayas, where typhoon Yolanda or Haiyan hit the hardest. Under the Reconstruction Assistance of Yolanda (RAY), the government allocated US$416.5 million to revive the agriculture sector in the region, signifying the importance of restoring the livelihood of 3.5 million people who are directly or indirectly dependent on the coconut industry. It is also important for restoring the shortage of oils and fats supply and, which has pushed prices to levels that are burdening the local people.

Despite massive plans and support to restore the loss of around 33 million coconut trees on 295,000 hectares of land that were destroyed by the typhoon, it will not yield overnight success or in the near-to-immediate future. The gap left by the anticipated decrease of coconut oil production in the oils and fats sector needs to be filled to ensure that those who affected are not burdened by the hike in prices of oils and fats as a result of the pressure on coconut oil.

Since November 2013, coconut oil prices have shown strong upward trends despite weaknesses in the other vegetable oils. This is because of supply worries by coconut oil consumers as to the availability of the feedstock. This has caused a premium of around 60 percent as compared with palm and soybean oils.

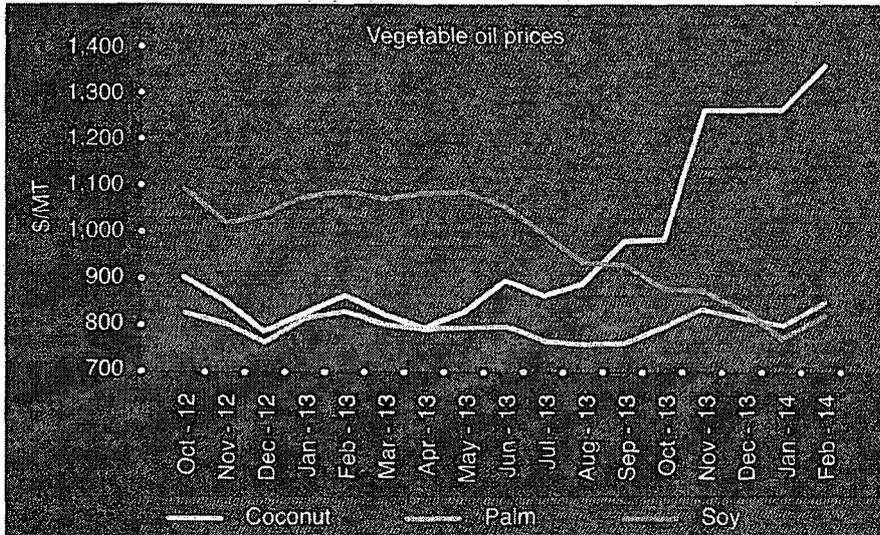

compared to palm oil, which can be bought for 60 pesos/kg. The 30 pesos cushion is comfortable enough for palm olein to become the preferred cooking oil.

Filling in Gaps of the Growing Food Sector

No longer touted as the "Sick Man of Asia", the Philippines is now showing strong GDP growth as a result of to increased economic activities in the services sector. This is reflected by the Philippines having outgrown India as the reached 89.9 billion pesos in 2012, recording a CAGR of 11 percent from 2007. The same growth can also be seen in the hotel, restaurant and catering sectors, with the market size reaching 260 billion pesos in 2012, showing a healthy CAGR of 10 percent from 2007.

The tremendous growth in food sectors has seen local and international and local restaurant and hotel chains expanding rapidly in the Philippines. Dunkin' Donuts, which currently has around 700 stores

Palm Oil and Pakistan's Resilient Consumer Market

Pakistan's political unrest might seem endless and its security situation may be deteriorating but it still remains one of the biggest consumer markets in the world. With an estimated population of 188 million, Pakistan is the 6th most populous country at the moment and according to World Population Data sheet, Pakistan's population will reach approximately 363 million in 2050. Consumer spending in Pakistan has registered an increase of approximately 26% in the past 3 years and it is mainly because of the increased awareness, rapid urbanization, growing middle class and penetration of leading international brands.

The chart below indicates that the real per capita income of a general consumer in Pakistan has increased steadily in the last ten years and currently stands at USD 1,386/-. This steady increase coupled with the increasing trend of women working, has led to a rise in household income of an average family. According to estimates, a normal consumer in Pakistan spends approximately 42% of his/her income on food and food related items. This trend of spending on food items is also corroborated with the increase in the imports and consumption of oils and fats in Pakistan.

Current Market Dynamics In the Unites States' Edible Oil Scene

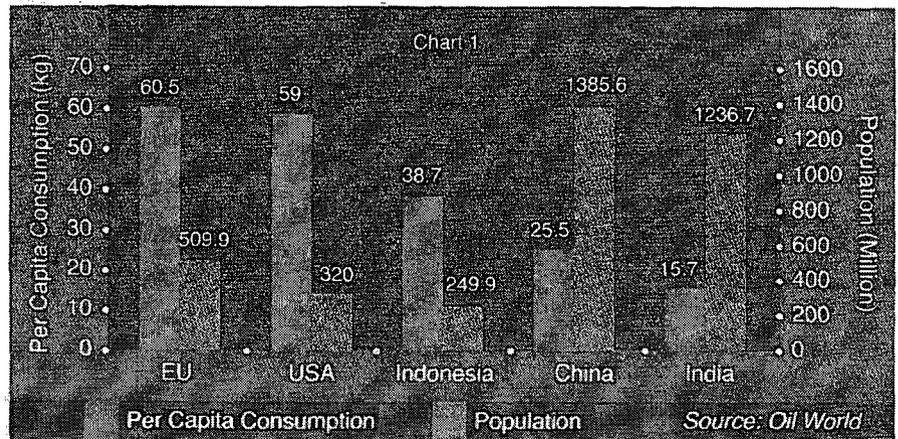

950,000 MT of palm oil was consumed but in 2013, consumption of palm oil increased to 1.35 million MT, an increase of 31%. This is despite the growth of almost 700,000 MT in soybean oil consumption. (Chart 2).

Palm oil import into the US has grown impressively since it was first imported in the late 1950s. Over the last decade, palm oil imported by the US has grown from less than 200,000 MT to more than one million MT in 2013, making palm oil the highest of all edible oil imports, overtaking rapeseed oil, which has over

THE UNITED STATES is the biggest consumer of oils and fats in the American continent. The total oils and fats consumed in the US in 2013 was recorded at 18.9 million metric tonnes (MT) compared with 17.6 million MT in 2012. In 2013, the US was recorded as the second highest per capita consumption of oils and fats globally, at 59 kg. (See Chart 1).

As expected, soybean oil is the most consumed oil in the US with 8.78 million MT, which is about 46% of all oils and fats consumed. Other major oils consumed are palm oil, rapeseed/canola oil and tallow. About 25% of the consumption is for non-food use, which includes for animal feed and for the oleochemical industry, including biodiesel.

However, the most interesting development in oils and fats consumption in the US is the impressive increase in palm oil consumption. In 2012, about
