Fulbright was retained by the Republic of Iraq ("Iraq") to represent it in a litigation matter. Fulbright engaged the services of the Shawket H. Al Shabib Law Firm which was regularly asked to provide basic advice and guidance on a number of generic issues including Iraq governmental procedures, identifying members of the Iraq government who approve filings, and re-establishing contact with Iraq government representatives when it was necessary for Fulbright to receive directions, documents, and information in relation to the litigation matter. Members of Fulbright have worked with this law firm from time to time for almost thirty years. The Shabib Law Firm assisted Fulbright and Iraq in this particular capacity for more than two years, and it received compensation for providing the "local counsel assistance."
