The Fast Lane

Hitting the open road on your honeymoon may sound spontaneous and romantic. But taking a road trip requires some research. These eight tips insure you won't get taken for a ride.

Plan early. Rental-car rates, like those of plane tickets, tend to rise with demand. The longer you wait, the likelier it is that fares will go up, so be sure to reserve your car when you book your airfare. Many travel websites even offer discounted rates for air, hotel and car packages. For last-minute rentals, ask your hotel concierge for help in booking. He can direct you toward the best deal or rent a car for you.

Shop around. Research rates at different companies through general search engines, such as expedia.com, orbitz.com or travelocity.com. When you've found the rental-car company with the lowest fare, visit its website to check for an even lower price. Also, investigate weekly rates, which can be heavily discounted, even if you don't expect to use the car for seven days. Join the club. Like airlines, many rental-car companies have loyalty programs. Join the free ones, and you can get coupons and extra perks. Avis Preferred Service members skip the line at the counter at most locations and go right to the car, for example.

Factor in the extras. Allow for gas, valet fees and parking charges when you're setting your travel budget, since these can really add up.

Pay attention to details. Don't take amenities for granted. Ask your company to send a confirmation that your rental will include requested features, such as air-conditioning or a MP3 jack. Also, inspect the vehicle carefully before you drive off the lot. Mark down any exterior scratches or interior stains and alert the attendant, so you won't be held liable later.

Avoid unnecessary fees. Renting a car at the airport may sound convenient, but companies often charge extra taxes and fees for airport rentals that can add up to an additional 25 percent. And if you expect you'll be tired after your flight, it may be safer to take a taxi to your hotel and pick up a car the next day. Also, don't make the mistake of returning the car with a half-empty tank—the rental company will charge you more to refill it than it would have cost you to do so yourself.

Read the fine print. The most complicated part of renting a car is deciphering the insurance. Buy coverage only if you're not already protected by auto and homeowner's or renter's insurance—and even then, check to see what your credit card covers. (It may be enough.)

Don't be a no-show. Recently, rental-car companies have begun cracking down on last-minute cancellations by charging fees. To avoid paying for a car you don't use, be sure to ask if there's a cancellation policy when you book.

SHORELINE

To the untrained eye, the tugs and their charge appeared harmless, even amusing, as they lumbered up the river with the flooding tide. But the U.S. Coast Guard's Inland Navigation Rules clearly state that in these situations, a "sailing vessel shall not impede the passage of a vessel which can safely navigate only within a narrow channel or fairway." And over the years, several scary encounters like this have taught me well: Ships move much faster than little sailboats. Take evasive action sooner rather than later.

This skipper gained a new appreciation for signal regulations when he had a close encounter with a barge.

With all haste, I began the drill: I started the engine of our Catalina 34, Ukiyo, doused the sails, and looked at the chart for a suitable parking place into which we could duck to allow the leviathan and attendants to pass safely. I then grabbed the VHF and was about to hail the lead tug when a series of five thunderous honks hit us like a shot over the bow, shaking me to my bones and bringing everyone on deck. It was the inter-

HORN SIGNALS

- Sail or power motoring: one long blast
- Powerboat stopped or has no way: two long blasts
- Sailboat under way: one long, two shorts blasts national danger alert, "the get out of the way or you're going to get hurt" signal.

Though still half a mile away, the helmsman was taking no chances that I might not be as alert as I actually was. It would've been easy to take umbrage at this auditory assault—after all, he could see that I'd already begun to take evasive action—but I knew these mariners were complying with Rule 34, which obligates them to sound this signal if they are "in doubt whether sufficient action is being taken by the other to avoid collision." I then radioed them to say that I did see them and would soon be out of the path. Next time, I'll begin the drill with the radio call first.

HONK FIVE TIMES: OF MICE AND MONSTERS

EVEN FROM A MILE AWAY, IT LOOKED BIG. So big, in fact, that the container barge on the St. Johns that bright, sunny day had a four-tug escort that together occupied almost the entire navigable width of the huge Florida river.

A few minutes later, the barge and its escorts quietly passed, and from our position on the sidelines I noticed that no one on the tugs gave us another glance. All eyes were focused on the river ahead and their important task.

About a mile ahead, the marine procession abruptly halted. The tugs adroitly danced about their charge, turning it 180 degrees and gently pushing it to the wharf and the waiting crews that would unload its container cargo and send it off in myriad directions on I-95.

A mere mouse in a field of monsters, we carried on toward the upper river and our next anchorage. The meek and monstrous alike, however, share the same responsibility: to safely navigate our respective vessels according to the clearly defined set of rules.

CHARTERING: WEATHER, SIMPLE

WE'VE ALWAYS SUSPECTED THAT THINGS are a little different for the folks at Barefoot Yacht Charters, on the Caribbean island of St. Vincent, and the photo at left pretty much confirms it. The company recently alerted CW editors to the opening of a state-of-the-art meteorological station employing traditional forecasting techniques at its marina at Blue Lagoon.

"At the recent opening ceremony, managing director Mary Barnard told the assembled guests that the company's in-house weather experts, led by Dr. James Ward, had conducted several months of painstaking research before assembling this unique piece of technology that will be of undoubted benefit both to charter guests and cruising yachtsmen alike. There will be no fees for use of the service," says a Barefoot staffer.

Souvenirs

Q We plan to do a lot of shopping while on our honeymoon. Is there anything we should know before bringing keepsakes back from overseas?

A Even if you manage to stretch your souvenir-spending dollars, you could find yourself coughing up cash at the border, or having to leave your fabulous finds behind altogether. That's because when you return to the United States, you will be asked to fill out a declaration form, listing the items you've bought over and above the personal exemption (the exemption may be anywhere from $200 to $1,600; in most cases it is $800). As a family, you are allowed to pool your exemptions for a joint one, therefore making your personal limit higher. Your next $1,000 worth of purchases is taxed at varying rates. However, there are some customs caveats: Antiques that are at least 100 years old are duty-free, including trinkets made of ivory and tortoiseshell (items that cannot be imported if they are new); baked goods and certain cheeses are allowed, but meat, fresh fruit and vegetables and some plants and seeds are not. And there are limits on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, based on country of origin.

The U.S. Customs and Border Protection website at cpb.gov has information on overseas shopping, including dos and don'ts. Also, remember that some countries charge a large value-added tax (VAT) on merchandise. To receive a VAT refund, ask for a "tax-free" check every time you make a purchase, then have it stamped by the customs agents in the originating country before returning home. For more information, go to globalrefund.com.

Bring on the Bridesmaids!

not realize just how stressful the process is, so you'll need to be clear about it from the start. Otherwise, you may find yourself dealing with a clueless person whose inattention and lack of prioritizing will stress you out even more than you already are. If a member of your bridal party just can't seem to get with the program—say, she keeps putting off helping your maid of honor set up the shower—it's your job to talk to her. Does she know what's expected? Can she handle it? If it's just a lack of awareness of what the job entails, a short conversation may be all it takes to jolt this bridesmaid into action.

Linda Blair of Chicago, Illinois, was puzzled by one friend's lax behavior. "It seemed as if she was never around and she wouldn't return calls for days," she says. "I thought she didn't want to be part of things or that she was just lazy or disorganized. My feelings were hurt, and I was ready to tell her to forget it. Then I decided to talk to her and explain my concerns. Once I spelled it out for her, things got better. The night of the rehearsal dinner she took me aside and told me how genuinely happy she was to be part of my wedding party. All it took was my taking the initiative with her. Since that day, we've actually gotten to be better friends."

The Obligatory Bridesmaid

Do you really have to ask your fiancée's stepsister or your long-lost cousin to join the bridal party? This can be a tricky situation. Generally, if you're concerned that a family relationship may be jeopardized by not including someone, then you should ask her. Let's say you happen to know that the stepsister would love to be a bridesmaid. Then it makes sense to ask her—but be sure that you make her feel just as welcome and special as your other attendants. It's excellent diplomacy to bring in a member of your spouse's family who has made it known that she wants that honor. And you can congratulate yourself for doing your part in constructing a bridge between the families and establishing good relations with your future-in-laws.

You may face other kinds of obligatory situations that can be dealt with differently.

By the time Lisa Coviello of Montreal, Canada, got married, she had grown distant from many of the friends in whose weddings she'd played a part in years past. "I found that I didn't feel comfortable asking a few of these women to join my bridal party, so I decided that if I hadn't been in touch with them for more than two years, I would not include them," says Coviello. "I worried a little that someone might be insulted, but it all worked out fine. I think that people usually understand these kinds of things."

Of course most of your bridesmaids will turn out to be perfect gems. They'll be there for you when you feel overwhelmed, they'll wear the gown you choose without a single complaint, they'll do anything and everything for you to make sure your big day goes exactly the way you want it to. And this is the way it should be for every bride. Just don't forget to thank them when it's over, not just with a gift, but with some big hugs and genuine appreciation. And pat yourself on the back for having earned the loyalty and support of such wonderful friends. They've made the effort because they love you! ■

Hottest Carnival in the Caribbean

Vincy Mas, St. Vincent and the Grenadines' annual summer Carnival celebration, is packed with historical meaning and cultural pride. This year, it takes place June 25 through July 6 and features its traditional vibrant program of activities, contests, and parades. Festivities include street parades, King & Queen of Bands, Junior Carnival, Miss Carival Show, Steelband, and Calypso and Soca competitions. The 12-day celebration is one party after another, where locals and visitors alike can experience a dazzling fusion of colors, creativity, merrymaking, music and masquerades.

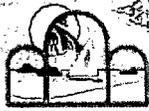

Event highlights include Miss Carival—featuring Caribbean beauties from neighboring island destinations competing against “Miss SVG” for the coveted “Miss Carival” title; and Vincy Mas’ J’ouvert and Street Party—the Vincentian version of American Halloween. In this party, locals exchange their Mardi Gras garments for homemade costumes and gather downtown for a jovial street party peppered with food, music and spirits. Midday brings another wardrobe change, this time for more practical T-shirts collected from individual “band” or parade groups. Once assembled, the party begins and the festivities climax with a Mardi Gras parade.

About St. Vincent and the Grenadines

A string of 32 islands in the southern Caribbean, St. Vincent and the Grenadines—with its crystalline waters and warm, sweet air—is a haven for those looking for an escape to paradise. South of St. Vincent, the Grenadine islands are strung across 40 miles of intense blue ocean like a necklace of precious stones on velvet. For all their charming remoteness, these islands have something for everyone—whether it be the family traveler, the solace and romance-seeker, or the adventurous explorer.

A collection of 32 islands and cays in the Windward Islands, St. Vincent and the Grenadines is a genuine beacon for travelers who are drawn to roads less traveled. With a selection of private island resorts in different budget range, couples can choose the perfect hideaway of their dreams, and enjoy romantic seclusion and opulent pampering.

Located only a three-minute water taxi ride from St. Vincent, Young Island Resort features 29 beachfront and hillside cottages, each with a private terrace overlooking the pristine ocean, dotted throughout its 35 acres of lush land.

Best known for being completely unplugged, Petit St. Vincent offers total privacy and barely a trace of the world from which you escaped - no televisions, phones, casinos, not even room keys.

Just a 10-minute boat ride from Union Island, Palm Island Resort is a 135-acre private island escape that is famous for its white sand beaches that stretch the entire length on the western coastline.

Mayreau is the most rustic Grenadine island - no airport, a single unnamed village, no central electricity and a yearly population of about 250 locals. For those in search of the true unplugged Caribbean honeymoon, Saltwhistle Bay Club is the answer.

A collection of 32 islands and cays in the Windward Islands, St. Vincent and the Grenadines is a genuine beacon for travelers who are drawn to roads less traveled. With a selection of private island resorts in different budget range, couples can choose the perfect hideaway of their dreams, and enjoy romantic seclusion and opulent pampering.

Located only a three-minute water taxi ride from St. Vincent, Young Island Resort features 29 beachfront and hillside cottages, each with a private terrace overlooking the pristine ocean, dotted throughout its 35 acres of lush land. Celebrate your new beginning by relaxing on the white sand beach or in a hammock, or tackle a sailing or a diving trip. Following a sun-soaked day, the on-site, hillside Spa Kalina is the perfect place to refresh and rejuvenate before dinner. Dine in the privacy of your cottage, or opt for a beachfront thatched kiosk. Locally grown fruits and vegetables are in abundance, as well as the catch of the day, poultry and meats. Each meal also comes with the resort's secret recipe – six loafs of bread: white, coconut, banana, raisin, cinnamon, and wheat.

Best known for being completely unplugged, Petit St. Vincent offers total privacy and barely a trace of the world from which you escaped – no televisions, phones, casinos, not even room keys. With only 22 cottages spread over 113 acres and a ratio of two staff for every guest, your every need is met with a wave of a flag – literally. Hoist a red flag, and you will not be disturbed. Hoist a yellow flag, and a staff member will soon be at your service. Beachfront and hillside cottages are naturally air-conditioned with the ever-present ocean breeze while ceiling fans and louvered windows keep the air circulation moving. Each one has a living room, wooden sundeck, separate bedroom, bathroom and a dressing room.

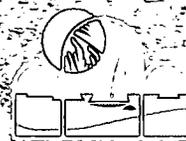

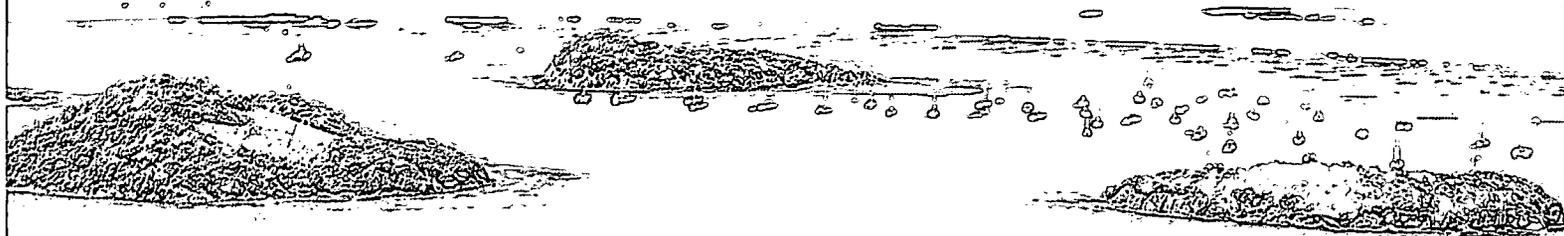

Just a 10-minute boat ride from Union Island, Palm Island Resort is a 135-acre private island escape that is famous for its white sand beaches that stretch the entire length on the western coastline. The resort boasts 43 guest rooms, including 24 beachfront stone cottages that are dwarfed by the coconut palms and charmingly styled with their island setting in mind. Of special note are the Island Lofts, which sit above the water on five-foot stilts. Newlyweds can relish Euro-Caribbean cuisine with freshly caught seafood and locally grown vegetables. Nature lovers will allure in panoramic walking trails where indigenous iguanas and interesting birdlife abound, while water lovers enjoy windsurfing, snorkeling, kayaking, and hobie-style catamarans.

Mayreau is one of the smallest inhabited Grenadines and perhaps the most rustic – no airport, a single unnamed village, no central electricity and a yearly population of about 250 locals. For those in search of the true unplugged Caribbean honeymoon, Saltwhistle Bay Club is the answer. Eight unique guest rooms are set amid a tropical garden of some 22 acres. Each features a spacious bed/sitting area with an ensuite bathroom, and all accommodations were built by local craftsmen using stone and hardwood from the island.
