HIGHLY SKILLED WORKERS: GOOD FOR THE ECONOMY-GOOD FOR THE UNITED STATES

OVERVIEW

Highly skilled workers boost U.S. competitiveness in the world market, stimulate job creation here in the U.S. and are essential to a vibrant and innovative economy. As Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) open up new markets to the free flow of goods and services, the exchange of skilled professionals with language and regional expertise enables U.S. business and exporters to better understand the foreign markets and take advantage of the newly created business opportunities.

Congress passed the U.S. Korea Free Trade agreement in 2011, and implementation began in March of this year. U.S. businesses and exporters need highly skilled Korean nationals to take full advantage of the opportunities in sectors as varied as media, telecommunications, agriculture and legal services. Allowing additional highly skilled Korean workers to bring their talents to the U.S. recognizes the business realities of having further opened markets with a major U.S. trading partner.

Congress has complemented recent free trade agreements with an allotment of high skilled visas for the FTA partner country, including: Australia, Canada, Chile, Mexico, and Singapore. Each time, Congress has also carefully included protections to ensure that these visa holders do not take jobs that American workers could fill.

"If Washington is serious about job creation, it needs to stop turning away the very people we need to create the new businesses and jobs of tomorrow that our country's success depends on."

New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg

BUILDING ON A VIBRANT EXCHANGE OF CITIZENS

Korea allows an unlimited number of highly-skilled U.S. citizens to obtain work in the Korean market. By contrast, only about 3,500 Koreans are able to secure high skilled visas each year in the U.S., despite the fact that each highly-skilled worker creates an additional 2.5 jobs.

Korea sends more students to study in the U.S. per capita than any other country. In 2009, while 2,100 U.S. students studied in Korea, 72,000 Korean students spent $2 billion to live and study in the U.S. Yet upon completing school, most Korean graduates cannot obtain U.S. work visas. Instead of filling vital skills gaps and founding high-tech start-ups in the U.S., they take their skills elsewhere.

According to the Brookings Institution, immigrants were key founders of 39 percent of the engineering and technology companies started in California between 1995 and 2005, and of more than 25 percent of the engineering and technology companies founded nationwide during those same years. In 2005, these companies produced $52 billion in sales and employed 450,000 people.

Expanded Opportunity. Infinite Possibility.

AN INDISPENSIBLE ALLY

The U.S.-Korean relationship is based on strong political, security, and economic ties that have developed over more than 60 years. Korea supports U.S. economic and strategic priorities around the world, across issues as varied as prudential financial regulation, environmental sustainability and nuclear security.

STRONG ECONOMIC PARTNERSHIP

The Korean economy is fast-growing and dynamic, supported by world class intellectual property protections. The World Bank has ranked Korea as the eighth easiest place to do business.

- Korea is the U.S.'s seventh-largest trading partner. In 2011, U.S. Korean bilateral trade reached $145 billion, an increase of 44% in just two years.
- Between 2008 and 2011, Korean companies invested $13.9 billion throughout the U.S., broadening the local tax base in the communities where they invest, and creating jobs for American workers.
- In 2008, of the more than 20,000 U.S. companies that exported to Korea--nearly 90% were Small and Medium-sized Enterprises (SMEs) who exported $14.2 billion, or nearly 60% of all U.S. goods exports to Korea.

"Artificially low limits on visas and serious bureaucratic obstacles prevent employers from hiring the people they need - and send entrepreneurs to other countries."

The Partnership for a New American Economy & the Partnership for New York City

Facilitating access to the U.S. for highly skilled Koreans will spur new bilateral trade and investment opportunities. Both countries benefit from a vibrant exchange of goods, services, professionals, tourists and students.
